THE DREAM GOWN OF THE JAPANESE AMBASSADOR.

BY BRANDER MATTHEWS Author of "Vignettes of Monhattan." (Copyright, 1896.)

After arranging the Egyptian and Mexican pottery so as to contrust arrecably with the Dutch and the German beer mugs on the top of the blockcase that ran along one wall of the sitting-room, Cosmo Wayninese went back into the bedroom and took from a half-smpty trunk the little cardboard boxes in which, he kept the collection of playing cards, and of all manner of outlandish equivalents for these ampletinaturement of fortune, picked up hare and there during his two or three years of dilettante travelling in strange countries. At the same time he brought out a Japanese crystal ball, which he stood upon its silver tripod, placing it on a little table in one of the windows on each ald of the fireplace; and there the rays of the western sun lighted it up at once into translucent loveliness.

The returned wanderer looked out of the window and asw on one side the graceful and vigorous tower of the Madison Square garden, with its Diana turning in the Docember wind, while in the other direction he could look down on the frozen paths of Union Square, only a block distant, but as far below him almost as shough he was gazing down from a balloon. Then he stepped back into the sitting-room itself and noted the comfortable furniture and wood-firs crackling in friendly fashlen on the hearth, and his own personal belongligs scattered here and there as though they was gazing down from a balloon. Then he stepped back into the sitting-room itself and not been our shore more than six or seven hours, and yet the most of his order to have been added to whom he had announced his return, and with whom he was to eat his Christmas dinner that evening. He had not been our shore more than six or seven hours, and yet the most of his order to see a same six of the mann that the had to the common of the most of his order to see a same six of the same see and the sea of the same see hubbling from the earth and laponing sent be recalled also the time and took from one of his many trunks a long, loose gardent of pale gray slik, Apparently thits b

Having thus wrapped himself in this unusual dressing-gown with its unexpected buttons of gold and silver. Cosmo Waynijete went back into the front room. He dropped into the arm chair before the fire. It was with a smile of physical satisfaction that he stretched out his feet to the blekery blaze.

blaze. The afternoon was drawing on, and in New York the sun sets early on Christmas day. The red rays shot into the window almost horizontally, and they filled the crystal globe with a curious light. Cosmo Waynfete lay back in his easy-chair, with his Japaneser robe about him, and gazed intentig at the beautiful ball, which seemed like

As he peered into its transparent depths, which his vision focused upon the spot of light where the rays of the setting sun touched it into flame, he was but little surprised to discover that he could make out tiny figures in the crystal. For the moment this strange thing seemed to him perfectly natural, and the movements of these little men and women interested him so much that the fixing of his gaze was intensified. And so it was that in a few minutes he saw with no astonishment that he was one of the group himself, he himself in the rich and stately attire of a samural. From the instant that Cosmo Waynfets discovered himself among the people whom he saw mov-and it must soon come to the ears of the man whom he wished to take unawares. Now he was lying prone in the street, seemingly sunk in a drunken slimber, so that men might see him and carry the news to the treacherous assassin of his beloved master. As he lay there that afternoon, he revolved in his mind the devices he should use to make away with his enemy when the hour might be ripe at last for the accomplishment of his holy revenge. To himself he called the roil of his fellow ronins, now biding their time, as he was, and ready always to obey his orders and follow his lead to the death, when at last the sun should rise on the day of revenge.

So he gave no heed to the scoffs and the jeers of those who passed along the street, laughing him to scorn as they beheld him lying there in a stupor from excessive drink at that inordinate hour of the day. And among those who came by at last was a man from Satsuma who was moved to voice the reproaches of all that saw this sorry sight.

"Is not this Oish! Kuranosuke?" said the man from Satsuma, "who was a councillor of Asano Takumi he Kami. and it must soon come to the ears of the sight. "Is not this Oishi Kuranosuke?" said the man from Satsuma, " who was a councilior of Asano Takumi no Kami, and who, not having the heart to avenge his lord, gives himself up to women and wine? See how he lies drunk in the public street! Faithless beast! Fool and craven! Unworthy of the name of a samura!!"

And with that the man from Satsuma trod on him as he lay there and spat upon him, and went away indignantly. The spies of Kotsuke no Suke heard what the man from Satsuma had said and they saw how he had spurned the prostrate samural with his foot; and they went their way to report to their master that he need no longer have any fear of the councillors of Asano Takumi no Kami. All this the man, lying prone in the dust of the street, noted; and it made his heart giad, for then he made sure that the day was soon coming when he could do his duty at last and take vengeance for the death of his master.

could do his duty at last and take vengance for the death of his master. He lay there tonger than he knew, and the twilight settled down at last, and the avening stars came out. And then, after awhile, and by imperceptible degrees, Cosmo Waynfiete became conscious that the scene had changed and that he had changed with it. He was no longer in Japan, but in Persia. He was no longer lying like a drunkard in the street of a city, but sumbering like a weary soldier in a little oasis by the side of a spring in the midst of a sandy desert. He was saleep, and his faithful horse was unbridled that it might crop the grass at will.

The air was hot and thick; and the leaves of the silm tree above him were never stirred by a wandering wind. Yet now and again there came from the darkness a faintly fetid odor. The evening wore on and still he slept, until at length in the silence of the night a strange huge creature wormed its way steadily out of its lair annit the trees, and drew near the sleeping man to devour him firefely. But the horse nelghed vehemently and beat the ground with his horfs and waked his master. Then the hideous monster vanished; and the man, arouned from his sleep, saw nothing although the evil smell still lingered in the sultry atmosphere. He lay down again once more, thinking that for once his steed had given a false alarm. Again the courser notified its rider, and again the was well-night stiffed by the foul emanation that trailed in the wake of the misbegotten oreature. He rebuked his horse and laid him down once more. A third time the dreadful beast approached and a third time the faithful onther came the breath of a gentle breeze, so that the man and the his core and laid him down once more. A third time the dreadful beast approached and a third time the faithful only discern his mighty enemy; and at once he girded himself for the light. The scaly monster came full at him with dripping fangs; its mighty body thrusting forward its huge and hideous head. The man met the beat full on the crest, but th

EL PASO, Texas, Apris a.—John Sesiman, the victor of not less than twenty fatal shooting affrays in Texas, the exterminator of "bad men," and the slayer of the notorious John Wesley Hardin, is to-night lying with a bullet hole through his body.

About two or three months ago Selman and United States Deputy Marshal George Scarborough had a quarrel over a game of cards, since which occurrence the relations between them have not been cordial. This morning at 4 o'clock they met in the Wigwam salcon and both were drinking. Scarborough says that Selman asked him to come out here; I want to see you," and that the two walked out into an alley beside the salcon, and Selman, whose sou is in the Juares (Maxico) jail on the charge of abducting a young lady from this side for immoral purposes, said to Scarborough: "I want you to go over the river with me this morning; we must get that boy out of jail."

Scarborough expressed a, willingness to go with Selman, but stated that no had break should be made in Juarez. Scarborough says that Selman then reached for his pistol with the remark: "I believe I'll kill you."

Scarborough says that Selman them reached for his pistol with the remark: "I believe I'll kill you."

Scarborough is a Selman attempted to rise. When Selman was searched him. He says that he had a pistol, but that it was taken from him after he fell and before the police reached him. He was shit by every shot Scarborough fired. Scarborough fired.

Scarborough is about 38 years old, was born in Louisiana, but was raised in Texas, and was several years old, was born in Louisiana, but was raised in Texas, and was several years old, and has lived a storny life. When not drinking he was as gentle and modest as a child, but he did not know what fear was and has killed not less than twenty outlaws. He was a dead shot and quick as lightning with his gun Lasi August, in this city, the notorious John Wesley Haxdin challenged him to a free fight in the Acme salcon, and Selman killed that dangerous character, simes Barus Restoration.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., April 5.—The restoration of Simon Burns to the presidency of the National Window Glassworkers' Association, which was ordered by court on Saturday, threatens to disrupt the strongest labor organization from a financial standpoint in the world. The opponents of Burns say they will at once renew the fight against him, but on different grounds. If defeated in their plans to oust him, it is claimed they will withdraw from the associations. Burns has many warm adherents, and the fight of the factions promises to be more bitter than ever.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

Deafness Cannot be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear.
There is only one way to cure deafness,
and that is by constitutional remedles.
Deafness is caused by an inflamed condiction of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.
